For even more powerful searches and more detailed reports on your disk partitions, I recommend Dr. Recuva. It doesn't have all the same features as Comfy Partition Recovery, but it's very easy to use, and it's free. At first, it didn't even recognize that the disk was being used. I tried to get Comfy to fix it but it didn't recognize my SATA controller. I tried a few other partition recovery software programs but they didn't work for me. I finally found DriveSavers and it worked like a charm. I backed up all my files to an external drive and then used DriveSavers. It not only recognized the partition but it even recovered the files within 30 minutes! The estimated time was 3.5 days, but it reduced that to 30 minutes. It worked flawlessly! My only problem was that I didn't have enough space on my backup drive for the files it recovered. To solve this problem, I used an external disk enclosure for my backup drive. I attached it to my desktop, loaded DriveSavers on my desktop, and then connected the backup drive to the enclosure. I was then able to use the enclosure to expand the backup drive. You can use an external disk enclosure to store data (backup) on your computer, while you are using your computer. This prevents the computer from running out of space.
